

Following in the Royal Footsteps

Civil Servants are those who work for the King.

Since he reigned the country in 1946, His Majesty King Bhumibol Adulyadej, King Rama IX has been working tirelessly to alleviate poverty and problems encountered Thai people all across the country. With his strong determination and his far sightedness, thousands of projects have been initiated and maintained to constantly bring changes, development and peace to his citizen.

His Majesty King Bhumibol Adulyadej has been dedicated himself for the benefits of the country and the people since he reigned the country with ten-fold moral principles of a sovereign in mind by following in the Royal Oath of Succession to the Throne as:

“We will reign with righteousness, for the benefit and happiness of the Siamese people.”

It is now evident to all of us that His Majesty the King has never deviated from the Royal Oath since then.

To celebrate on the Auspicious Occasion of His Majesty the King’s seven Cycle Birthday Anniversary 5th December 2011, civil servants should follow what His Majesty the King thought in the Address given on the Civil Servants Day as a reminder of our consciousness. Civil servants should follow the correct path in doing the duties for the happiness of the people and sustainable development of the country, following in the Royal Footsteps of His Majesty the King that has been working during his reign. We can say that

- * His Majesty King Bhumibol Adulyadej has lived in Thai people’s hearts.
- * His Majesty the King is a role model in morality, and kindness for His Majesty’s subjects.
- * His Majesty the King is a role model in gratefulness for His Majesty’s father and mother.
- * His Majesty the King is a role model in hard-work, efforts, and sacrifice for the society and the people.

* His Majesty the King is a role model as a good leader, good ruler, and perfect in ten-fold moral principle of a sovereign in mind.

It is anticipated that every civil servant at all levels throughout the country will be familiar with His Majesty's efforts and will pledge to follow the Royal Footsteps by becoming the very best civil servant to contribute for the benefits of people, the society, and the country.

“Our country development is the development for the society which occurs as a result of the action of all people in the Nation. Civil servants should take this matter seriously by seeing importance of others, respect others, use reasoning and esprit de Corps in carrying out their duties in the merit of ourselves and the sustainable stability of our country.”

Royal Address to Civil Servants

On the Occasion of the 1999 Civil Servants Day

To reciprocate his endless sacrifice, and to celebrate the Auspicious Occasion of His Majesty the King's Seven Cycle Birthday which will fall on the 5th of December 2011, all civil servants should seriously adopt His Majesty's working principles in their work life so as to further generate good governance and the well being to the country as they always say “civil servants are those who work for the King”, and who

- * possess qualities of honesty, justice, sacrifice, patience and discipline;
- * are knowledgeable, adaptable, cooperatives;
- * are responsible, punctual, work-directed and results-oriented, and
- * work for the benefit of the country, with and for righteousness.

The Civil Servant Pledge

The Pledge is intended to awake the consciousness of ourself and to discriminate the goodness from the badness. The accumulation of good deeds can be used as a barrier to evils and can nurture future merit undertakings.

“I hereby pledge.....

to follow in the footsteps of His Majesty the King as my inspiration in striving to be a good civil servant;

to work to the best of my ability and knowledge to solve problems of the nation and the people; and to enhance the national benefit through adherence to righteousness at all time.”
